Dear Sir,

I read an article about which appeared in a recent issue of Inside Detective Magazine.
It was written by Cy Young.

I wonder if you have perfected your camera
for taking odors.

I have been having a wonderful time showing the article to my friends and family.
For years I've been told that I was crazy because I said (and still do) that blondes smell differently than brunettes and that I could tell when someone had been ~~there~~ in a room before me by the smell (I don't mean because of perfume, shaving lotion etc.)

I used to tell them I could smell different odors.
Apparently the person I told it too couldn't and he would laugh and say I was crazy.

Because of your theory on individual odors and the camera you are working on, my friends are now telling me that perhaps I do smell all the odors I say I do and that individuals do smell differently. They admit that perhaps I'm not as crazy as they have always believed.

Thanks for letting your theories be printed.

Very truly yours,
Helen Friend
